These acts to be held between 7:00 and 8:00 p. m. and followed by a balloon ascension to approximately 10,000 feet.

Every one is most cordially invited to attend these wonderful free attractions and also to enjoy the pleasure of renewing old friendships with past and present residents of these four communities.

New Lenox Live Stock Sale To Be Held Fri. Night

The New Lenox Live stock Market which has been held at the J. C. Brisbane farm east of New Lenox on the Lincoln Highway every Saturday afternoon for a number of months, has been changed to Friday evenings at 7 p.m. beginning this week. The change was made to make it more convenient for the farmers to attend these sales. The promoters of the Market found that it was rather difficult for the farmers to quit their work in this busy season to attend these sales, so it was decided to hold these sales Friday evenings instead for the summer months until further notice. Read the adv. of the New Lenox Live stock market on page 7 of this issue for more particulars.

SEEK TO UNITE TINLEY PARK M. E. CHURCHES

The Tinley Park German M. E. church, known also as the Orland Township M. E. church are seeking to unite with the English M. E. church in Tinley Park. Both denominations belong to the same conference, the only difference having been in the language, German still being preached in the Orland Township M. E. church.

Since the church home of this congregation was destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, the church services have been held in the Tinley Park school auditorium.

Monday night of this week the church board met to accept the report and the vote which was taken Sunday by the congregation members in which 13 out of 14 members present unanimously voted to unite with the English M. E. congregation in Tinley Park. In a vote taken on whether the new church should be built in Tinley Park or on the site of the church destroyed by fire, the vote was 46 in favor of building in Tinley Park and 27 to build on the old site.

If the Tinley Park English M. E. church members agree to the union of the two congregations, the new church will be erected in Tinley Park. If the consolidation of the two congregations does not materialize, then it is possible the new church will be built on the old site.

BROTHER BEAVER TAKES A LESSON

Mr. Beaver, the original dam builder, gazes disconsolately at "the biggest thing on earth," Grand Coulee dam rising in the Columbia river 92 miles west of Spokane. Grand Coulee will create a reservoir 151 miles long holding 10,000,000 acre-feet of water to irrigate 1,200,000 acres of fertile land. It will generate 8,300,000,000 kilowatt hours of firm power annually, plus 4,200,000,000 secondary hours.

Although man's steel reinforcements (right) surpass Brother Beaver's wooden ones, the furry little dam builder is better fitted for his job than man, who must wear a life preserver on the job (left).

FEATURE

Work has just started on a new contract to place 6,000,000 cubic yards of concrete in the dam and west power house, increasing the height to 553 feet. Successors to the beaver are the form raisers (above) who shift forms for the yet unlaidd blocks of concrete. Hammerhead cranes are used for concrete placement from trestles at the dam. Inset is one of the 8-cubic-yard buckets which handle this part of the job.

The thousands of men who completed Grand Coulee's foundation last December are now back at work as the job of completing the dam begins. Shown above are the two towns where they live. In the foreground is Coulee Dam, which houses the government's forces, and across the Columbia river is Mason City, the contractor's camp.

Though risen and glorified, the Savior will never give up the servant character which he assumed in Grace when He came from the Glory that He had with the Father, to this poor world of woe. Throughout all the present age He is "working with" His own as they go forth in His name, and when He brings us into the Father's House, he will gird himself and serve us. He delights to minister with, in, and to those he loves. There is a Christian welcome here for you.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Is the Universe, Including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 19.

The Golden Text was, "Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth" (Psalms 124:8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness: come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding" (Jeremiah 51:10, 15).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Spirit is eternal, divine. Nothing but Spirit, Soul, can evolve Life, for Spirit is more than all else. Mind is the divine Principle, Love, and can produce nothing unlike the eternal Father-Mother, God" (p. 335).

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative, General Assembly
7th Senatorial District.

Some of the Illinois State police who were on hand at all of the sessions of the general assembly to keep the relief agitators under control could have been used in the municipalities committee on Wednesday when the second hearing on the city manager bills was held.

In the first phase many of the committee members were not able to secure seats; in fact some were unable to get inside the door of the committee room. There was a great deal of confusion over the place of meeting and several changes in location and time were made without formal notice to the members.

This was the hearing for the opponents and they were there in goodly numbers but all represented the Illinois and Chicago Federation of Labor. The first speaker and the most violent in opposition to the bills was the president of the Illinois Federation, R. G. Soderstrom who said that it was undemocratic to appoint a city manager, that he should be elected and that moreover he did not like the term "manager" for a city; that it was an industrial term and represented efficiency.

He said that "the will of the people is a principle in the democratic form of government and the election system is the most democratic form." When asked if he did not believe that the people should have the right to vote as to whether they desired city manager government as the bills provided for a referendum Mr. Soderstrom said "If you want to argue that the people have the right to be wrong, the answer is yes."

Nearly a Riot.

After three hours of speeches by the opposition, the meeting practically ended in a riot over a motion to adjourn without taking a vote on the motion to report the bills out of the committee with recommendations for passage. The majority of the committee decided to have a hearing on Friday in Chicago. The bills however are practically dead for this session.

The relief problem for which the session was primarily called has reached a deadlock. All bills to provide new taxes have been killed either in committee or on the floor. The administration, which must take the leadership in proposing new methods of administering relief, has assumed no responsibility and has ruled that no further state funds can be appropriated in this session because of the limitations of the governor's call. If a new session is to be called to run concurrently with the first special session it means an expense item of $10,200 alone, for the only remuneration to the members for special sessions. This is a $50 a member appropriation for postage and stationery. This amount could have been saved as well as other expenses attached to a special session if the governor had permitted ed the general assembly to consider the requirements of the relief administration and the state finances and then made a decision as to the amount necessary to appropriate.

School Board Bill

The controversial state school board bill known as senate bill No. 6 suffered the ignominious defeat of having its enacting clause struck by amendment. Predictions at the time the bill was introduced gave it 7 votes out of the necessary 34 in the Senate. It managed however to pick up 10 votes. This leaves the O'Neill-Van der Vries state board bill House Bill No. 41 the only bill on that subject on the docket and that bill is still the education committee of the house. Its sponsors have arranged for a committee hearing on Tuesday. House bill No. 41 has been gathering support since its introduction.

Drafted by the Illinois Education association and the Illinois State School Board association it received encouragement of two of the advisory experts to the 1935 educational commission. Dr. Wm. C. Reavis of the University of Chicago wired the sponsors that "House Bill No. 41 is in harmony with recommendation of the advisory committee to the educational commission. It provides educational needs of the state and to an agency to study continuously the report its findings to the governor and the general assembly. Without such findings constructive legislation is scarcely probable. I favor the bill in its present form and believe that its enactment into law would in the course of time contribute to the improvement of education in the state without infringing on the rights of anyone.

Dr. Eugene S. Lawlor of Northwestern university also wired "House Bill No. 41 is the best practicable step that I can conceive of at the present time. I am supporting house bill No. 41. The Chicago and Cook County Federation of Women's club gave the bill unqualified endorsement. Unless this bill is passed nothing further can be done on the school problems of Illinois until the next regular session of the assembly.

Back of the scenes in the general assembly an effort is being made in committee hearings, conferences, etc., to reach agreements on the many controversial measures before us. Most of the members agree that "lame duck" sessions are not conducive to the orderly consideration of so much legislation.

The 75th Congress

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Americans will regard with mixed emotions the record of the 75th Congress, and its effects on the welfare of our people.

During its three sessions, beginning in January, 1937, the Congress dealt with a wide variety of legislation. Within that period, citizens will recall, were fought thrilling legislative battles over the Supreme Court, the Reorganization Bill, the revised tax measure and others significant both to our Constitutional form of government and our national well-being.

But what the people will also recall is that despite swiftly-mounting expenditures of public funds, despite a record-breaking public debt, unemployment figures are expanding, production still lags, and relief rolls grow longer.

This is not what the people had hoped for when the 75th Congress opened its first session. It is not what they were promised back in January of 1937.

What the workers still want is real jobs and the real production which creates those jobs. What they consistently ask of any Congress is a record of constructive legislation to that end, rather than political maneuvering. On both these counts they have been frequently disappointed.

Throughout the nation the people are being asked to choose many of the men who will represent them next year on Capitol Hill. On these decisions will rest the fulfillment or the rejection of their demands.

Let them select as their agents in government men who by their records, both in and out of public life, have demonstrated a real intent to achieve recovery, regardless of factional pressure or of political considerations—and a long stride forward will be assured. The purpose of Congress is still to serve all the people.

BASEBALL NEWS

The Calumet Baseball Team has been barred from the Southwest Suburban League as the result of a ruling passed down by the Chicago Baseball Federation of which this league is a part. In that Calumet play in an enclosed park and charges admission, they are considered by the federation, a semi-pro team.

At a special meeting called Monday evening representatives from each town assembled to decide what was to be done. There were three alternatives: just drop Calumet and continue with seven teams; to admit another team into the league and finish out the season or to drop out of the federation and keep the league as was. To do the latter would mean that there would be no chance to get into the play offs or have any player participate in the all star game played annually at Wrigley Field. Then too, they would have to seek elsewhere for umpires.

Representatives of a team from Madison, Ill., were on hand and offered to finish out the season, but because no satisfactory arrangements could be made they withdrew their proposition.

The league is still in seach of an eighth team and may have to finish the season with only seven.

What we needed most was a flock of bushel baskets.
No alibis intended; but we really presented that game on a silver platter of errors.

George Bennett came to our rescue and caught for us in place of H. Cappel and Tuby McGovney took on the duties of R. Walsh at 1st base. Tuby landed over a couple of hits that really were honies. Old man Bennett just could seem to keep off base when he came to bat. He was tempted to trade his vast and extensive interest in the hot place for a cool seat on the bench, but as luck and good base ball would have it, he managed to get on bases most of the time. Bob Frisch dove for a hot grounder and ended up at Dr. McMahon's with a sprained hand. No other casualties except our bank roll, which took another licking. Five lots @ $1.50-7.50; 2 base balls at $1.30-$2.60; net cost of fun $10.10 and a headache.

Come on out next Sunday. We may even have a bargain bill. The youngsters play Orland and we are scheduled to play the Joliet Look Outs.

Riverview Offers
Many Attractions
For Young Folks

Thousands of boys and girls just released from the classrooms and anxious to make most of their long-awaited summer holiday, are finding the answers to their fun questions at Riverview.

Here, they find an aggregation of more than a hundred rides, shows and other attractions—lining a mile long Midway and offering an almost endless procession of fun possibilities. Indeed, averaging a different ride or attraction every eight or nine minutes, it would take a Riverview visitor more than fourteen hours to complete a tour of the Midway. And he would have no time at all for rest or refreshments.

In order that as many boys and girls as possible may enjoy this wonderland of fun, special rates will be in effect at Riverview for 3 days of each week. Throuth the season, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, excepting holidays, two cent price tags will be hung on the admission gate and on many of the boys' and girls' favorite attractions.

From the popularity records of past seasons, these include the "Strato-Stat," aerial thriller, the "Greyhound," speedy roller coaster, the "Hey-dey," fun-provoking ground ride, and the "Chutes," unique ride that climaxes with a sweep over a splashing pool.

The fun program at Riverview this summer, also, will be enlivened by a number of special programs and contests—some of them designed especially for the young fans and others for them to share with the adult members of their families.

First on this calendar of special events is the coming Fourth of July, this year a three day holiday. Since the Fourth is, traditionally, one of Riverview's most gala celebrations, plans are underway to take full advantage of the three day week-end.

Oh Lord, In Our Hour
Of Need

O Lord, in our hour of need,
Instill within the hearts of men,
The love that triumphs over greed.
Bring peace and plenty back again,
Thru infinite mind direct our nation.
Supply our needs and some to spare,
Bless each soul with inspiration;
O Lord it is my earnest prayer,
Let none remain an earthly power,
Who refuse to recognize
The increasing needs of every hour,
Let there be no compromise,
Since I have asked believing,
My faith shall stand steadfast,
I'm preparing for the receiving,
That, which in prayer, I've asked.

Sarah Lynn's voice said hoarsely, "Buzzards . . . buzzards . . . Didn't you know . . . we were . . . dead?"

"Say, listen, we're not dead and we're not going to be dead! I tell you they're on the job, looking for us! It won't be long, now!"

The planes kept flying over them. They returned again and again, but they never hesitated. Kitty Medill stood on her rock and waved and screamed, but the pilots gave no sign of noticing her.

"You fools, you fools! You blind bats!" she sobbed, cursing.

Then she made a careful survey of their situation and realized that they were hidden from above by a ledge over the one on which they had crashed. She might gesture and yell the rest of her life without being seen by the fliers.

"Okeh, then, I'll get out where they can see me," she decided. She didn't try to tell Sarah Lynn. She took half her matches and a sheaf of maps and charts and walked in the direction of Mt. Umunhum, stopping constantly to mark the trail in some fashion, tying to the chaparral the ribbon from her hair, her belt, her pink satin garter. When she found a bare rocky space she tore up her papers and gathered twigs and dry leaves and got her fire to going. She broke off branches of manzanita and fed the flame, and she discovered that green stuff made a denser smoke.

In an incredibly short time the planes were back, three of them, dipping and circling. She could see the pilots peering down. She stood away from the fire and tore off her blouse and waved, and one of the airmen waved an arm in answer. He flew perilously low, and she recognized the Hermod with Gunnar Thorwald leaning out to look at her. She pointed back toward the place where she had left her passenger, and he nodded and flew away in the same direction.

Kit's knees gave way and she sat down and the breeze blew acrid smoke into her eyes and mouth, but she was up in a moment, running back to the wreck.

"Babe, it's okeh! He's here! I mean, he will be in a minute—your boy-friend in his bus! Kid, it's all right, do you hear me?"

If Sarah Lynn heard she gave no evidence of it. She seemed to be busily preoccupied talking to herself, and the free hand opened and closed and tensed stiffly, so Kitty Medill raced back again to keep her fire going and wait for Gunnar Thorwald. He was an intolerable time in coming. She had moments of panic in which she was sure he hadn't seen her after all; that she had imagined the Hermod.

But at last she saw him working his difficult way swiftly through the thick, harsh underbrush.

"She lives?" he demanded hoarsely.

"She's alive, sure."

"Hurt? How?" Ice-blue gimlets, boring into her brain.

"Well, you see—it's on her. On her back. The ship is. I tried to lift it off but—"

"Take me there!"

She turned and ran back, Gunnar following so closely that he almost trod upon her. "Quick!" he kept saying. "Be quick!"

When they reached the wreck Kitty Medill shut her eyes. She didn't want to see his face when he saw Sarah Lynn, but it was almost as bad to hear him. It sounded as if he had flung himself down on the ground beside her, and Kit thought he must be talking in his own Swede lingo, for she could not understand the words, but she understood perfectly the terrible, racked sobbing.

When she heard him working Kit took her hands away from her eyes and looked at him. He was working so fast, so furiously, so surely, with such fierce efficiency. He wrenched and chopped and tore away, twisted and pried, dead white, with sweat pouring from him. It seemed to Kit, watching the cold frenzy, that he could have done it all with his bare hands.

Once he called to her and pointed to his canteen. "Give her water—a small drink at first." He looked at her full for the first time. "Only that I may need your help," he said levelly, "I would kill you."

"You needn't trouble yourself," she said jauntily. "I can tend to that little chore." She crawled close to Sarah Lynn and managed to make her take three swallows.

Two other men came running through the chaparral presently, with young Bill Dana following. They set to work instantly under Gunnar's directions and that speeded up the affair tremendously. Kit could see, but she was sure the ace could have done it alone.

One thing he did do alone. When the weight was finally dragged off Sarah Lynn the others stood aside and let him stoop and lift her.

She screamed once, a short, dreadful cry, and he put her down on the blankets Kit had spread. Sarah Lynn looked up at him, her eyes big in her burning face, recognizing him clearly. She said thickly, "Go away! Don't come in here!" She held up a warning hand. "Fly away in the night! Ladybug, ladybug, fly away home!"

When he bent over her, murmuring, she pointed an accusing finger. Her hoarse voice said, packed with scorn, "Keep away from me, drunk-en fool!"

Once again, Sarah Lynn Dana, social registerite, member of the exclusive suburb of Danavale, became news, furnishing hectic headlines in San Jose and San Francisco papers for many days.

She had flown with the notorious Kitty Medill, famous stunt-flier and moving picture double for dangerous scenes, who was making a first hop after being grounded by the Department of Commerce for reckless flying; she was lost; she was found, and found by Gunnar Thorwald, Norwegian ace, her fiancé; she would die; she would live; she would live, but she would never walk again.

It was after this last announcement that Kitty Medill committed

"Well, not exactly, asked, but she talks about you a lot. I mean, she's under opiates all the time, but she keeps murmuring your name."

"When—when can I see her?"

"Well, not just yet. They seem to think it isn't wise. The shock—" "You will tell me when I can see her?"

"I'll tell you." She put her well-groomed hand for an instant on his arm. "It's a promise. But in the meantime, you know, a little eating and sleeping—"

Duncan Van Doren arrived within the first week after the accident.

Duncan's well-bred face showed the effects of grief and shock; its pleasant veneer was rubbed off. "Well, I'm here now," he said, "and I'm here to stay until she gets well—or—doesn't get well."

Mrs. Dana gave him a wan smile. "Duncan dear!" It was certain, they had assured her, that her child would live. "But Bixford, who is the greatest bone specialist this side of Chicago, won't make any prognosis yet about the spine."

Conrad Jordan, who had left Tahoe instantly to join in the search, remained to look after Gunnar. "Though there's nothing I can do," he admitted to Lynn Dana, "except

Webster had shaken his head. "If he and the old lady hadn't given her the plane—"

"But, if she hadn't gone up with that miserable bum of a girl—"

"Yes, but if she hadn't been a flier it never could have happened to her," he said reasonably. "And I expect that's the way the family figures, her mother, anyway."

"I know," Mary Dana Webster nodded. "I wish Sally Ann would come home."

"She will, later," Lynn Dana said.

"I cabled and wrote that her presence would mean more to Sarah Lynn in a little while, during the waiting period—weeks, months of it, probably." All three of them were thinking that it might be years, as it had been for him. "You know, people are no end kind and sorry, but the drama goes out of the situation, presently. I mean, they get used to the fact, and life goes on again, and—well, the calls and the flowers and books and things dwindle away."

"There'll be whole conservatories full of flowers now that Duncan is here," Mary said bitterly.

CHAPTER XIII

Gunnar Thorwald was pacing the corridor when Duncan Van Doren got out of the elevator. Duncan's head was down; he did not see the flier. Gunnar stared incredulously, striding toward him, thrusting out an arm to block his way.

"You have seen her?" There was an emphasis on the first pronoun which made the question at once a demand and a protest.

Duncan looked at him with swimming eyes, nodding, his face convulsed. He manifested no resentment, no conviction that before him stood the cause of the tragedy; only an engulfing flood of sympathy and sorrow. He gulped, groping for his handkerchief—"Horrible—cruel!"

Gunnar pushed past him toward the elevator, but it rose as he reached it, so he turned and went leaping up the stairs. A woman with a big bouquet of garden flowers shrank out of his way.

"Mercy!" she said to her husband. "That fellow looks like a mental case!"

He flung himself through the door in spite of the card in the brass frame which read:

Dana

but he stood still on the threshold, staring.

Mrs. Dana, standing at the window, her back to him, turned at the sound of his entrance. "Please leave the room!" she said in an angry whisper. "No callers are permitted. My daughter is—"

Gunnar was not listening. There was nothing she could tell him about her daughter. He continued to stand still, looking at her.

"Leave this room instantly! I will ring for an orderly to put you out!" Mrs. Dana cried wildly. "Haven't you done enough? Aren't you satisfied with the suffering, the agony—" she was bearing down on him in soft fury. "Do you want to kill her?"

But Gunnar had reached the bed. He had leaned over Sarah Lynn, shaking, and said her name.

She was as nearly white as the olive and amber and ivory of her skin could be, and her nose, her brow, her chin, her cheek-bones were as sharp and salient as if they had been chiseled from marble. Her eyes flew open, bigger and darker than ever, sunk in shadowed hollows, and a startled recognition came into them at once and a blazing joy.

Fierceness of Bald Eagle Is a Myth; Never Saw Bird Attack, Student Says

The perennial yarns of the predatory fierceness of the bald eagle once again have been dusted off and are being broadcast throughout the land. Just a short time ago I read in a national magazine of wide circulation that "the eagles are seldom gentle and are among the fiercest birds of prey," writes N. R. Casillo in Nature Magazine. "They attack sheep, rabbits and often wolves. Eagles have tremendous appetites and have been known to devour a calf, a sheep and a dog in a single week." The author of the article, however, fails to disclose whether it was a single bird or a group of them that "devoured" the formidable beast. But, he does convey the impression that eagles had actually brought down the animals mentioned.

In another influential periodical it was averred that eagles have been known to attack children, and one was seen to fight and carry off a wildcat. Paradoxically, in another issue of the same paper there was an item about an eagle being ignominiously vanquished by a six-months-old Plymouth Rock rooster.

the latter actually killing the large bird of prey.

With apologies to the Bard, "what manner of bird is this?" It surely cannot be the same bird that I observed daily during my three-months' stay in the Alaskan archipelago; a period during which I never once saw an eagle attack anything alive, unless the few salmon that they pirated from ospreys could be considered living prey.

My observations of the birds were not casual, but were systematically conducted studies.

Effect of Carbon Dioxide

Carbon dioxide has a far greater effect than oxygen on the human respiratory system. If the carbon dioxide in a man's blood is increased by 3 per cent, his rate of breathing is doubled. If it is decreased by 3 per cent, says a writer in Collier's Weekly, his breathing stops completely. Considerable oxygen lack has its effects, but they are not comparable with those of the slightest change in carbon dioxide.

O. Henry Tells Tale of 'Cop And Anthem'

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

ADRY leaf fluttered into Soapy's lap. That would be the calling card of Jack Frost. In fact just last night Soapy had noticed that winter was approaching because three newspapers adroitly disposed did not keep out the chill as he lay on his favorite park bench. Soapy disliked the cold months, but with a little luck, he would manage.

Being an observant man, Soapy had learned long ago that there were two alternatives for him during the winter: Philanthropy or the Law. The former carried with it certain circumstances that interfered with a gentleman's privacy, as baths and such. So, Soapy had long favored the Law which did not meddle with his tastes as an individual.

Since he must do something at once about the cold weather, and since there was nothing to deter him now, he might as well begin at once. There were certain activities that Soapy knew carried ninety days on the Island, where there was heat and food, and clothing enough.

Soapy went into a not too respectable looking restaurant and ordered a pleasing dinner. When he had dined slowly and with precision, he announced that he had no money and suggested that the waiter call a cop. The next instant Soapy was gathering himself together off the sidewalk.

Soapy Is Luckless.

The second method would likely work. Picking up a brick he slammed it into a plate glass window. When the cop came, Soapy said "Here I am, I did it." The cop answered, "Who are you trying to kid, wise guy?" And was off to catch a man who was running after a street car.

There were two of Soapy's best cards, but he still had a few up his sleeve. Across the street stood a looking girl, gazing at the and a two ce styles. He sidled up to her, equipped with his throat, and carried on. If the project antics of a masquerade, she setup will be arr, along, Soapy after begun this sum

Beecher, ONCE IN PRISON

William Sidney Porter was born in 1862 in Greensboro, N. O. Henry, his pen name, came later. As a young man he went to Austin, Texas, where he worked in a bank. It was there that the embezzlement of $1,150 occurred, a crime that has never been really cleared up. However, Porter was sentenced to serve five years in an Ohio penitentiary for the crime.

In prison he settled down to a concentrated program of writing. In 1903 he contracted with the New York World to do a story a week at $100 each.

When he died in 1910, his body was interred in Asheville, N. C. Of him the Encyclopedia Britannica states, "The tragedy of his own life taught him a chivalrous tenderness for the unlucky."

her. There was a cop nearby that Soapy was counting on. Finally the girl turned, caught Soapy's arm and whispered, "I would have come over sooner, but the cop was watching us and I had to figure it out." She hung onto him as to an old friend, but at the next corner Soapy bolted. He didn't want anything to do with women.

Disturbing the peace is a sure one, thought Soapy, tugging at his coat to hold it closer, drunks and crazy people are always locked up. Accordingly he began his act, yelling and dancing around wildly. The cop watched a minute, and turning to the bystanders, he explained, "This one of them Yale lads celebratin' the game. We've instructions to leave them be."

Fatalistic End.

Soapy was disheartened. What did it take to rate the three months on the Island? He mused over his possibilities, and like a homing pigeon, he rambled along the avenues toward Madison Square Garden. Presently he passed a cathedral, dark except for one window that was rimmed with light. Soapy looked, and then his ear caught the pulsing tones of a pipe organ. What in the world? An anthem, one that did things inside of Soapy. He thought of all the forbidden thoughts, of his mother, of when he was a little boy and had a respectable way of living. These thoughts upset him until the result was that Soapy gave up his idea of spending the winter on the Island. He would get a job, he would be somebody and show the world!

A familiar touch sent a shiver down his arm. Looking up he saw the broad face of a cop. "What you doin'?"

Soapy answered, "Nothin'."

"Then come along."

The Magistrate gave him three months on the Island on a charge of vagrancy.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for June 26

SHARING SERVICE WITH THE LIVING CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Mark 16:1-8, 14-16, 19, 20. GOLDEN TEXT—And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them. Mark 16:20. PRIMARY TOPIC—At Work With Jesus. JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Our Living Lord. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a New World With Christ. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making a New World With Christ.

Easter again? No, the calendar does not say so, nor have we forgotten that we observed Easter ten weeks ago, but quite properly we study the resurrection story again today. Not only does it come in the sequence of our lessons as our final study in the Gospel of Mark, but the fact is that every Sunday is a reminder of Easter. The reason why we worship on the first day of the week is that it is the resurrection day. What life it would put into our Sunday worship if the glory of the risen Lord would shine forth (as it should) each Lord's Day in all of our service and worship.

It is difficult to think or write about the living Christ without using superlatives. Our lesson for today brings before us the most important truth that the world has ever heard—"He is risen"; it speaks of the worst thing in the world—"unbelief"; and it presents the world's greatest commission—"Go . . . and preach."

I. The Transcendent Truth (vv. 1-8). "Ye seek Jesus, the Nazarene, who hath been crucified; He is risen, He is not here" (v. 6).

The world anxiously awaits news, and, hoping almost against hope, it longs for good news. This is the good news—the Gospel—the all-important tidings that the Son of God who had taken upon Himself not only the form of man, but the sins of mankind as well, who had tasted the bitter death of Calvary's cross, could not be holden of death, but breaking its bands asunder had risen from the dead.

This truth becomes the chief burden of the messages of the disciples as they soon went everywhere proclaiming the Gospel. See the sermons recorded in the Book of Acts (2:24, 32; 3:14, 15; 4:10, 23; 10:40; 13:30). It was such preaching that was at the foundation of the Christian church. It may be that we should emphasize it more.

II. The Impassable Barrier (v. 14).

"He upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not." Many are the sins that men commit, but at the root of them all we find the heart of all sin—unbelief.

The tragic consequence of unbelief is that it shuts the door, throws up a barrier to God's blessing that is virtually impassable until God himself gives grace to believe. The astonishing thing is that the hardness of heart and lack of faith here were on the part of those who had been the disciples of Jesus, to whom He had made known the fact that He was to die and to arise on the third day, and to whom there had now come the word of eye-witnesses that they had seen the Lord.

While we marvel at their shortsighted unbelief, shall we not ask ourselves what hindrances we have placed in God's way in our own lives?

III. The Supreme Commission (vv. 15, 16, 19, 20).

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation" (v. 15). "And they went . . . and preached, the Lord working with them and confirming the word" (v. 20).

The great commission of Christ is still the "marching orders of the church," but how slowly we have marched. The writer of these notes was recently startled by statistics revealing anew the fact that "Christian" America is rapidly returning to the status of a mission field. It is said that last year 60,000 churches in America had no converts, and 9,000 churches were closed during the year. There are 10,000 villages reported to be without church services, and 30,000 communities without a resident pastor.

The command of Christ is that we should go to these pagan communities in our own land with the gospel, and surely it is our double shame that there are still lands where Christ has never been preached, yes, tribes that do not even have a word in their language for the blessed name—Jesus!

If we will go He will indeed work with us (v. 20) and accompany the message and ministry with divine authority and power. Who will go?

Men of the Mounted

by Captain G. Elliott-Nightingale Copyright, WNU

SEND A REGIMENT? NO, SEND FOUR MEN

THE difference between the American and Canadian methods of handling troublesome Indians was clearly demonstrated back in the late nineties when about four hundred Wood Cree Indians, fearing that they would be involved in the violation of a certain treaty between all the Cree tribes and the Canadian government, sneaked quietly away from their reservation in small groups one night and slipped across the border into Montana. Upon assembling there, the American peace officers and military men told the Wood Cree chieftains that they had better go back to Canada, because Uncle Sam had more Indians than he needed.

The Crees refused to depart and stayed "put" where they'd camped, threatening all kinds of trouble if they were bothered in any way. The result of this defiant attitude was that a thousand United States cavalrymen were soon uprooting the Crees and herding them north to the border. While the party was en route, messages concerning the return of the Crees were hurried through to the Assinaboine authorities, and the Northwest Mounted Police, requesting that an armed force be at the border to take charge of the returning Wood Crees. The messages were to the effect that these Wood Crees were a murderous lot and would take some handling if trouble or massacre were to be prevented.

Upon arriving at the designated crossing place on the border, the American colonel of cavalry was quite disappointed at not finding a regiment of red-coated infantrymen to meet the party and take charge of the 400 Wood Crees. His disappointment later turned to rage and anger for, veteran Indian fighter that he was, his advice about the handling of the troublesome Crees had been totally ignored for there was not even a squadron of Northwest Mounted Police to relieve him of his duties. Just when the air was blue with profanity, with brown spots here and there emanating from spluttering tobacco juice, three Men of the Mounted walked, not rode, into the American cavalry officer's presence.

"We have come to take over the Crees," the corporal announced. "You've WHAT!!!!!" shouted the colonel. The corporal repeated his remarks.

"Why . . . Good God, man . . . where's your troops? Why . . . you'll need a regiment to handle this bunch of rascals. How many men have you?"

"Well, sir, there's three of us here. The fourth man of my party is packing up our kits. He'll be with us in a minute, sir, asking your patience."

"Four men . . ." blustered the cavalry officer. "Why . . . it's murder."

"Not at all, sir," replied the corporal. "You see, we know these Indians, and they know we wear the queen's scarlet. They know, too, that we have kept all treaties with them. Ask them, sir. Find out for yourself."

The colonel did as requested and without any help or advice from the Men of the Mounted, the chieftains of the Wood Crees stepped out and said that never in all their experience since the redcoat pony soldiers had come, had they found a "forked tongue" among them. They had always been faithful to all treaties, and the chieftains concluded with the admission that they were glad to be back on Canadian soil, and that they would not have run away if they had not believed that they would be in serious trouble with the pony soldiers because the Swampy Crees had broken a promise and a treaty they'd made with the Northwest Mounted.

Later that week four Men of the Mounted were leading, not driving, 400 supposedly "bloodthirsty, scalping savages" northward, well into Canadian territory, finishing the job without any untoward incident, and without the loss of man, woman, child, or horse. On one side of the line Indian affairs were handled by grafting politicians who, under British law, would be classed as just plain criminals and crooks. North of the line Indian affairs were handled by a force of intelligent, trustworthy men whose efforts were unhampered by politicians, men who could not be bought and sold, men who kept faith with the promises they had made when they donned the scarlet and gold for 60 cents per day, and found.

The Name Josephine

The name Josephine, feminine form of the Hebrew Joseph, has the same meaning—"he shall add (children)." The name commemorates the happy exclamation of the mother of the patriarch Joseph at his birth: "The Lord shall add to me another son." Josephine, empress of France (1763-1814), most famous person ever to bear the name, must have found its meaning an ironic mockery, since it was because she bore him no son that Napoleon divorced her.

C. Houston Goudiss Offers More Advice About Reducing Describes the Perils of Unscientific Methods for Losing Weight

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

MY RECENT discussion of reducing in these columns brought many letters, indicating that the modern woman is, fortunately, weight conscious. This is an encouraging sign. For it shows that you are alert to the dangers of overweight, which not only destroys beauty but may indirectly contribute to heart disease, kidney disorders and diabetes, which take their greatest toll from among the heavyweights.

Guard Against Unscientific Reducing Methods

Some of these letters caused me great concern, however, because they indicate that in spite of my warning against unscientific methods of weight reduction, many women still cling to the idea that there is some magic in the various pills, powders, capsules, soaps, salts and mechanical devices that are sold at fancy prices and hold out alluring promises of speedy reducing without dieting or exercise.

It is bad enough that most of these fail to reduce. For they may delay the day when the victim of overweight will undertake a sound and scientific program of weight reduction that will effectively take off weight—thus improving appearance, benefiting health and increasing the chances of longevity. But what is far more serious is that some of these preparations may endanger health or cause lifelong physical impairment.

Dangerous Drugs

Drugging is particularly to be condemned, and no one should attempt to reduce by this method except under the advice and watchful eye of a physician. There are many invalids today who would be happy and healthy if they had not attempted to take some "reducing medicine" without consulting a physician.

One preparation that is still bought by foolish women—in spite of repeated warnings against its use—may even result in permanent blindness.

Almost equally objectionable are excessive purging—which may leave you a wobbly wreck—and fasting, which is even more dangerous to women than men.

Don't Diet Without Direction

A carefully regulated diet will not only maintain normal weight, but will banish overweight by forcing the body to burn its own excess fat as fuel. Having heard of this scientific principle, many women frantically and foolishly attempt to prescribe their own reducing diets—often with disastrous results.

There is always the possibility that one may omit calcium-bearing foods and thus impair the teeth, or leave out foods rich in iron and copper and interfere with the formation of the hemoglobin or red pigment in the blood.

One of the most common and most serious errors is to omit all bread, potatoes and cereals, in the belief that carbohydrates are "fattening foods." Carbohydrates are required by the body in order to utilize the fats in the diet, and when reducing, they are also necessary to burn up excess fatty tissue.

Just as fire cannot burn without air, fat cannot be utilized in the body without the presence of starch or sugar. When the diet contains insufficient carbohydrates, fat burns incompletely, resulting in the dangerous acetone type of acidosis.

Counting Calories the Easy Way to Reduce

The one safe, sure and scientific method of getting rid of surplus weight and at the same time maintaining top health—is to consume a diet that is balanced in every respect, but to count your calories at every meal, making certain that you consume fewer calories each day than your body requires for its normal energy expenditure.

I will gladly send to every reader of this newspaper, a copy of my reducing bulletin. This includes a chart showing the caloric value of all the commonly used foods—plus a week's sample reducing menus. By following this scientific plan for weight reduction, you can easily lose from one to two pounds weekly. A more rapid reduction is not advisable. At that rate, you can lose from six to eight pounds in the course of a month—twenty-four pounds at the end of three months. That is a lot of weight to lose and will make a vast difference in your

The Film Stars' Method

This simple and scientific method of controlling the weight is the one used by film stars in Hollywood. It is essential that they keep slim and practically every important film player has a clause in her contract calling for a cancellation if she permits her weight to increase beyond a certain point. But at the same time, film stars must safeguard their health, for their work is the most strenuous of occupations!

Counting Calories Is Fun

In Hollywood they make a game of counting calories. You, too, will find it amusing, as well as beneficial to health and looks. And you will be rewarded by noting a drop in weight every time you step on the scales.

If Your Weight Is Normal Keep It That Way

It has been determined that the ideal weight—that is the weight that best promotes health and longevity—after thirty, is the normal weight for one's height at the age of thirty.

If you are approximately thirty and your weight is normal, you should send for my Calorie Chart and Reducing Bulletin and use it to help maintain your present weight!

If you are over thirty and overweight, you should not lose another day before sending for the bulletin so that you can begin at once to regain your normal weight by the safe, simple, scientific and comfortable method of counting calories.

As the pounds disappear you will feel as though you had stepped out of a prison of fat into a new world of physical freedom. © WNU—C. Houston Goudiss—1938—16

First President of W. C. T. U.
Frances Elizabeth Willard was born in Churchville, N. Y., in 1839. After some years as a teacher, she became secretary of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in 1874, and its president in 1879. She was made first president of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union in 1891. She originated a petition against the importation and manufacture of alcohol and opium, which was signed by 7,000,000 persons. She was an editor of the Chicago Post and the Union Signal and wrote "Glimpses of Fifty Years," and numerous articles in the temperance cause. She died in 1898.

Just What Does
It All Mean to Me?

That is the question that naturally comes to your mind when you think of or talk to your neighbors about the rather bewildering activities of the federal government in Washington.

Fragmentary news reports of congressional action or administration policies often are confusing, but if you will read William Bruckart's interpretative WASHINGTON DIGEST, which is published each week in this paper, you will know more about what all the moves on the capital checkerboard mean to you.

Through long service as a Washington correspondent, Mr. Bruckart is particularly well qualified for this particular job. He gives you an illuminating interpretation of what Congress is doing or is expected to do, and what is happening or is expected to happen in other departments of the government.

READ the Bruckart letter every week for an intelligent understanding of what is going on at the national capital.
